Delivered by leading experts in the field, the Online Certificate Courses in Men's Health provide medical professionals with a robust understanding of men's health issues commonly seen in primary care. The program will enable you to better address your patients' concerns, exploring medical conditions pertinent to men.

The gender-specific health needs of men are a significant part of day-to-day work in general practice. In Australia, men are generally less healthy than women and die sooner. Three quarters of Australian men are overweight or obese, and half of all men have chronic disease. More than half drink alcohol excessively, and the leading cause of death among Australian males is cardiovascular disease. It is therefore crucial that primary care physicians have the necessary skills to address common concerns among their male patients, improving outcomes and saving lives.
